

Running From Office

Michael Martin lived quietly through his first 26 years. He had a quiet job as a paralegal in a South Boston law firm. He was not connected to either of his divorced parents in any special way and had few friends until one of the Islamic partners in the law firm took a special interest in him and his work, forming a bond through his curiosity in the Islamic faith. They mentored and groomed him in Islamic studies, giving him a sense of fulfillment and inner peace where his family roots in Catholicism had failed. The subtle cues escaped him until he found himself entangled in a deadly political plot.
